I was really glad to hear that we were getting the real players in the game so it's a great mix between the old and new. We are able to get a lot more out of how those players move, how they tackle. It's incredible how far we've come in the last decade. I actually sat in on the development of the game. It was an incredible experience. It's incredible how far we've come in the last decade with respect to the motion capture and the tech. The Player Model I actually went to the studio for FIFA 19. I was really glad to hear that we were getting the real players in the game so it's a great mix between the old and new. And FIFA 19 has a few things that we want to make sure doesn't happen again [to the Player Model]. We also have a running list of all the features that are now taking place in FIFA. We have a list of all the things we've got to implement in FIFA 21. We have a lot of different parts of the game that are getting better and better. When you build an entirely new FIFA, you can build a lot of things better than what we've already done before, because we're building on what we already know. The Player Model is a perfect example of where we have to make the perfect FIFA for the player. We've been able to improve things like jumping and acceleration and reaction time and making them feel more human. We can always improve the quality of the facial animation. The human element of the player is an important element of the game. Designing the Player Model There's tons of different things that have to be done to make that character as professional as possible. The character model is probably the most important element of the game. The Player Model needs to be as complete as we can make it in order to support the game. When you design the model, you design the player. There's so much detail involved in making that model. If you leave it out, you're essentially leaving a hole in the game. FIFA is the deepest game you've ever seen in terms of the amount of detail you have to include into your game
