Percutaneous lumbar discectomy for severe lumbar spinal stenosis causing cauda equina syndrome. Cauda equina syndrome caused by lumbar spinal stenosis is a poorly understood disease and is characterized by unilateral or bilateral neurogenic claudication, lower limb weakness and dysfunction, sensory deficits and bowel and/or bladder dysfunction. In some cases, cauda equina syndrome is accompanied by a 'sensory overflow syndrome' in which the patient has 'S-shaped' sensation (S-sensation). Previous studies have shown that percutaneous lumbar discectomy can relieve leg pain effectively and improve the QOL of patients with intractable low-back pain caused by lumbar spinal stenosis. A 50-year-old woman presented with severe lumbar spinal stenosis and cauda equina syndrome caused by spondylolisthesis. This patient experienced right-sided neurogenic claudication and S-sensation of the left lower limb. Lumbar spinal stenosis was relieved following percutaneous discectomy, and urinary bladder dysfunction became worse. Therefore, the lumbar central nerve root was partially entrapped in the neural foramen at the L3 level. After nerve root release, the dysfunction improved and percutaneous discectomy is thought to be effective for cauda equina syndrome caused by lumbar spinal stenosis. "Oh my god, I'm doing my period now," Lambeau replies. Some of the comments include: "Fuck these girls, did he pay a hooker to make this?" "I'm going to get him," another person says.
